

Sushi John: Unforeseen Consequences

Chopchopchop

John 'Sushi John' Michaelson carefully cuts sushi.

Ring

The door of 'Sushi John's Sushi' opens. A man in a black jacket enters. He walks up to the counter, slowly, confidently. He rings the 'service' bell.

Sushi John pauses mid-slice. He puts down the knife, and walks to the front of the store, eagerly awaiting a new sale. He sees the Jacketed Man, waiting patiently.

Sushi John walks to the counter, and asks, "How can I help you?"

The Jacketed Man replies, "I'd like 2 California Rolls, with extra ginger."

Sushi John gets into his car, tired after a long day of work. Or, at least that's what he tried to believe. Lately, his business had less and less customers, ever since the news article claiming that "87% of people who eat sushi from 'Sushi John's Sushi' die within the week, due to undercooked and spoiled ingredients." The article was true of course, but there was no reason to tell the general public!

He drives, stopping at an intersection. The light turns green, and he goes. Suddenly, a car slams into his, and his last conscious thought is, "I forgot...I had a piece of sushi..."